

Persons, Divine and Human: Kings College Essays in Theological Anthropology

The understanding of personhood is one of the central issues of debate in many academic disciplines as well as in society at large. This collection of specially commissioned essays provides a modern theological exploration. Against a background of the renaissance of trinitarian thought, the authors explore the interrelationship between divine personhood, as it is expressed in the doctrine of the Trinity, and human personhood. These essays indicate the contribution trinitarian theology at Kings College can make in the dialogue on the nature of personhood.
