Twelve Russian Short Stories: Chekhov, Turgenev, Gorky, and more (Volume 1)

There is something special about Russian writers. I have always loved Chekhov, Dostoevsky, Turgenev and Tolstoy. Not only did they write novels and plays, but they also wrote short stories; wonderful, thought provoking short stories. I have chosen a wide selection of stories from nine different authors. As different as they are, I think you will agree, they are distinctly Russian. I invite you to relax in front of the fire, in your favorite easy chair, and take a trip of a different nature. Not through Western eyes, will you travel, but through the simple eyes of the observers of human nature that these Russian writers are unparalleled at. They speak of the dignity of the human soul, and of the despair of the common folk. They speak of the wasted lives of the rich, and the humble lives and aspirations of the peasants. In their distinctly Russian style, they reach deep into your soul; troubling you, disquieting your staid existence. Perhaps your view of life needs to be disquieted, for you to spend some time reflecting on the nature of man, life, justice and of human value.
