

Specimens of Australian Oratory: Comprising Speeches Delivered in the at the Bar, and on the Public Platform (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Specimens of Australian Oratory: Comprising Speeches Delivered in the at the Bar, and on the Public Platform On the 25th January, 1961, Sir Henry (then Mr.) Parkes moved the second reading of a bill to abolish capital punishment, on which occasion Mr. Buchanan delivered the following speech: -Mr. Ewarts annual motion in the House of Commons to effect the purpose of this Bill, has long rendered me familiar with all the arguments used to support the principle of the Bill now before the House, and which I trust will be thrown out by a decisive majority. The honorable member for East Sydney, Mr. Parkes, has not added anything new or original in the shape of argument, to what we have already known as being continually put forth by the upholders of his views. Indeed we could well afford to leave the honorable member unanswered, so little has he said that in any way calls for argumentative reply. The subject of prison discipline, or the proper and just dealing with prisoners, is one of large importance - all the more important when we reflect upon the strange notions that are abroad in reference to their treatment, and the spurious diseased sympathy which seems to set in in favour of great criminals, and of which the Bill now before the House seems to be an emanation. I am afraid we are going so far with our superfine philanthropy and heaven-born benevolence that we run a strong chance of losing all distinction between the virtuous and the vicious, the criminal and the upright honest man.
