Then home, with much ado to find a way, nor any sleep all this night to me nor my poor wife. But then and all this day she and I, and all my people labouring to get away the rest of our things, and did get Mr. Tooker to get me a lighter to take them in, and we did carry them (myself some) over Tower Hill, which was by this time full of peoples goods, bringing their goods thither; and down to the lighter, which lay at the next quay, above the Tower Docks. And here was my neighbours wife, Mrs., with her pretty child, and some few of her things, which I did willingly give way to be saved with mine; but there was no passing with any thing through the postern, the crowd was so great. The Duke of York came this day by the office, and spoke to us, and did ride with his guard up and down the City to keep all quiet (he being now Generall, and having the care of all). This day, Mercer being not at home, but against her mistresss order gone to her mothers, and my wife going thither to speak with W. Hewer, met her there, and was angry; and her mother saying that she was not a prentice girl, to ask leave every time she goes abroad, my wife with good reason was angry, and, when she came home, bid her be gone again. And so she went away, which troubled me, but yet less than it would, because of the condition we are in, in fear of coming in a little time to being less able to keepe one in her quality. At night lay down a little upon a quilt of W. Hewers in the office, all my owne things being packed up or gone; and after me my poor wife did the like, we having fed upon the remains of yesterdays dinner, having no fire nor dishes, nor any opportunity of dressing any thing....
