

A biting black comedy that centres on three hopeless expat teachers in South Korea who have all ended up in an ESL classroom for the wrong reasons. Every year thousands of people travel to faraway lands to teach English as a foreign language. The fools. One such expat is Paul Taylor, a heartbroken Aussie looking for a fresh start in a South Korean classroom. The lack of training isn't much of a help, but it's the baffling natives and unhinged flatmates that really start to convince him he's crash-landed in another galaxy. Packed with over the top characters, English Toss is a demented sitcom of a novel that revels in the extremes of expat dislocation. Length: 105,000 words. Dave Franklin is the author of five other novels and a collection of dark short stories - Looking for Sarah Jane Smith, To Dare a Future, Manic Streets of Perth, Girls Like Funny Boys, Straitjacket Blues and other Stories of Unease & The Goodreads Killer. With a politically incorrect take on life similar to the likes of Irvine Welsh, Christopher Brookmyre and Bret Easton Ellis, Franklin's caustic brand of profanity-filled prose, which often centres on dysfunctional loners, is not for the easily offended.
