

Pharaoh (Siren Publishing Allure)

[Siren Allure: Erotic Historical Romance, Interracial] Newly-crowned Pharaoh Khai I is coerced by his Grand Vizier Azar to find a bride, but Khai has more important things to do, like practicing for his upcoming coronation. Azar and Khai's mother, Queen Hathor, take the matter out of his hands and secretly send out private invitations to the young available princesses in the world to come and dance for the new Pharaohs hand in marriage. Khai learns of the invitations after the dancers have performed for him, and he has to admit that there were some delightful candidates. But he considered none of them as beautiful as Princess Zuri of Nubia, who refused to dance for him. Azar considers the refusal an insult to the kingdom and an embarrassment to the new Pharaoh, so in order to save face, Khai orders Zuri to return to the palace and dance for him at his birthday party. Headstrong and fiercely independent, Zuri Bassef did not want to dance for Khai because she refuses to be put on display just to appease a man's ego. Her mother learns of the refusal and insists that Zuri fix what she has broken. Zuri has never disobeyed her mother before, so she returns to Egypt to dance for Khai. How did she know that she would turn on not only Khai, but every man in the room, except the former Vizier who was old enough to be her grandfather? Azar has loved Princess Zuri since they were kids, but unfortunately Zuri hates his guts. So many years have passed since he had seen her that he had no idea she had grown into such a lovely woman. Had he known, he would not have sent out those invitations. All it took was one steamy look from the beautiful African princess to make him lose his mind. He had to have her in his bed, no matter what the cost. Was one night with her worth breaking a friendship bond he and Khai shared for years?  A Siren Erotic Romance
