

A Shimmering Sea: Hong Kong Stories

A SHIMMERING SEA: HONG KONG STORIES tells of a quest for home, told through a vivid and lyrical sequence of narratives. Sophronia Liu chronicles first her beginnings in 1950s Hong Kong. Her parents each an indigenous inhabitant of a clan village had very different life-experiences from each other. Her father attended prestigious Kings College as a scholarship student; her mother, an illiterate peasant, was fully occupied in raising ten children. Among the episodes, some tell of her growing up during the 1960s: of a grade school classmates tragic suicide, the arrival of a rambunctious and feisty domestic helper from the countryside, plainclothes detectives who came to her home to solicit her father for a bribe. She tells of her mothers long illness, of turmoil and quarrels among family members. Some twenty years later, when Liu was a student in the American Midwest, memories of these people and places flooded back to haunt her. Responding to their call, Sophronia eventually returned to Hong Kong in 2006, to live near her native village and continue to write. She died on 14 January 2013, one day after her 60th birthday. A most interesting and satisfying collection of short stories held together by a common thread, the lives of one Chinese family, the indigenous Lius of the Hong Kong New Territories. A masterly piece of work Proverse Prize Judges 2012 From the moment that I read So Tsi-Fai, a ghost story about a grade school classmate in Hong Kong who committed suicide by drinking pesticide after receiving bad grades, I knew that I was in the presence of a writer of extraordinary talent. readers experience the world of her parents and siblings in Sophies 1950s childhood with the intensity that her writing provides, while also experiencing her love for Chinese culture in all its detail, richness, and variety. Sophie has the power to transport her readers across oceans, continents, and cultures and to make them feel what she has felt, as if we shared her exquisite capacity to savour the world. ? Madelon M. Sprengnether, Regents Professor, Department of English, University of Minnesota, USA.
