Not illustrated. 1868 Excerpt: ... 180 ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA. P.16.1. 4.--The anagram upon the name Davis, here attributed to Martin, should have had a note to point out that the combination of these two names leads one to suppose that the Davis alluded to was probably the future Sir John Davies, and that the Martin to whom this saucy witticism is attributed, may have been the Richard Martin commemorated by Ben Jonson, and the person for a scandalous attack upon whom Davies was temporarily struck off the books of the Middle Temple, as mentioned at p. 1G8. The outrage occurred on the 9th February 1597-8. Davies was restored to his membership of the Inn on the 30th October 1601. The late Lord Stowell, in his communication to the Society of Antiquaries on this subject (Archaologia, xxi. 108,) somewhat favours a suggestion of Alexander Chalmers that a rivalry between Martin and Davies in colloquial wit may have led to Daviess misconduct. The peculiarity in Sir Johns gait noticed at p. 1G8, and which would attract more attention among young students than it deserved, was probably not unique. Sir Walter Scott, who no doubt drew from an original, describes something very like it in the instance of Baillie Macwheeble, who waddled across the court-yard of the manor-house of Tully Veolan, like a turnspit walking upon its hind legs. P. 23, last line but one,--for Bradbourne, read Brabourne. P. 40, n. 2,--for whose Autobiography, read whose sous Autobiography. P. 85, third line from the bottom.--These remarks may perhaps be a young mans judgment upon the works of the celebrated Dr. John Reynolds, president of Corpus Christi College,

Oxford. Bishop Hall spoke of him in other terms:-- He alone was a well-furnished library, full of all faculties, of all studies, of all learning; the memory and r...
