

In One Town: A Novel, Vol. 2 of 2 (Classic Reprint)

He was under the impression the master of the hard-working little paddle-boat would not trouble to inquire what the Greenbacks tonnage really was, and he felt a thrill of pride and pleasure at having outwitted at least one of the inhabitants of Sloughford. After taking a short constitutional up and down the poop, he approached the wheel, and leaning against it, cigar in mouth, he began to think how he ought to deal with the merchants tallyman, for the purpose of tampering with the tallyboard. He had almost made up his mind to bribe the tallyman boldly, and was about to walk to the main hatchway, when he observed the tug which had helped his ship up the river paddling swiftly towards him. Hallo! he cried. I wonder is this chap making for me. Yes. Blowed if he aint. What is he up to, I wonder? The tug-boat was now alongside, and her rope was thrown aboard the Greenback and made fast.
