Not illustrated. 1857 Excerpt: ...and each drawing a revolver faced the crowd that was advancing down the narrow street. The shudder of fear that went through the assembly was actually visible. Two balls in that mass would have made terrible havoc. We stood thus, facing each other for thirty seconds, and then I raised my pistol and fired six balls successively in the air, and replacing it in my shawl took out another (my volcanic repeater), and shook it in their faces. It was enough. The terror of that revolver will remain in Hebron as a civilizer. We turned our horses heads again and rode very slowly on, but no more stones were thrown, nor did one of the crowd pass that spot. Ten minutes afterward passing the lower Pool of Hebron which is, probably, the one over which David hung the murderers of Ish-bosheth (2 Samuel, iv. 12), and looking leisurely at the lower end of the town, we turned up the valley and bade farewell to the burial-place of the patriarchs. We paused a half hour under the great tree in the upper part of the valley, of which I have spoken, known as the terebinth of Abraham. This magnificent tree, by far the finest in Syria, has a trunk about seven feet in diameter, and extends its branches for nearly fifty feet in all directions. Its great size and its situation near Hebron has given it its name, but there is no possibility of its dating so far back as the period of the Saviour, much less of Abraham. It stands in the midst of the extensive vineyards of the ROAD TO JERUSALEM. 255 valley of Eshcol which, at the time of our visit, were in bud, but not yet in leaf. Every thing indicated a luxuriant growth of the grape in this valley, and the accounts that we received were like those that the spies gave to Moses. We left the tree at 11 oclock, retracing our way
